MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

SUBJECT : Address to the Sixth Coordination Conference

1. We're glad you will be able to accept the invitation of Ambassador Hart to address the Sixth Coordination Conference. Your address is confirmed for Wednesday, 18 June, 2:30 to 3:30 p.m., in the auditorium of the National Inter-departmental Seminar, Arlington Towers.

2. The Conference is for directors of training and senior officers who are concerned with the content and conduct of the Government's training programs on problems of development and internal defense in the backward countries. I suggest that you speak informally for about thirty minutes and then use the balance of the time to answer questions. I believe that this approach will be more effective with this group than reading an address from a prepared text. With this in mind, I have taken the liberty of attaching an outline of topics for your consideration.

3. The participants will be from State, Defense, USIA, AID, and CIA. Each will have a Top Secret security clearance.

OUTLINE

I. INTELLIGENCE AND FOREIGN POLICY

A. Influence of Intelligence on Policy

(You discussed this subject informally and in a most effective manner at the National Interdepartmental Seminar in March 1968. By way of a reminder, your approach to the subject at that time was about as follows: 'We don't make policy. By the same token the information that we produce would be pointless if it didn't influence policy. This is not to say that the information is contrived to influence policy. We all know that knowledge is power. If we wanted to, we could slant the information to have the desired effect. We simply do not desire it We suggest that you conclude with an example where intelligence was a primary factor in a foreign policy decision. In March you cited the Arab-Israeli war; this or a more recent case is what we have in mind.)

B. Ways CIA Interacts with Other Agencies within the New Administration's Policy-making Machinery

(The general focus of this year's Coordination Conference will be on the new Administration's approach to coordination and decision-making in foreign policy and on the capabilities and emphases of the several foreign-affairs agencies in carrying out policy in the countries of the "developing" world.)

II. PRIORITIES OF THE INTELLIGENCE EFFORT

A. Collection Requirements

(You also discussed this subject during your March visit. Your approach then was about as follows: One of the tough problems is requirements. What must we collect and what can we afford to let loose of? There's simply not enough money to go around. It's very important to make some tough decisions about what we really need for national security and what we can dispense with A mention of your National Intelligence Resources Board might be appropriate here.)

B. Political and Paramilitary Action

(There is always much interest in this part of the CIA's work. We suggest something along the lines of who or what level has the initiative for proposing such operations, how they are approved, what they are intended to accomplish, and the priority placed on them relative to the collection of foreign intelligence.)

III. ORGANIZATION OF THE INTELLIGENCE EFFORT

A. Intelligence Community

(There is always much interest in this subject--not so much in an organizational wiring diagram as in how the individual efforts of the various agencies are combined into an overall collective effort. There would also be great interest in what your commission as the Director of Central Intelligence means for these agencies, in what some of your major concerns are, and in particular areas where outstanding adequacy exists or areas where there is need for increased attention.)

B. Community's Effectiveness Against the Main Targets

(There would also be great interest in any comments you may care to make on the overall effectiveness of the intelligence effort against the Soviet Union and China.)

IV. INDEPENDENT CONTROLS ON INTELLIGENCE

A. Relations with the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board

B. Relations with Congress

The Honorable Richard Helms
The Director of Central Intelligence
Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Mr. Helms:

The purpose of this letter is to invite you to address the Sixth Annual Coordination Conference to be held June 17-19 for directors of training and senior officers of the foreign affairs agencies who are concerned with the content and conduct of U.S. Government training on problems of development and internal defense in the developing countries.

These annual coordination conferences are conducted by the National Interdepartmental Seminar which serves as the focal point for training in development problems and internal defense. As you know, the Seminar also offers advanced special instruction for senior officers on U.S. policy formulation, application and coordination in the developing nations. This year's conference will focus on the new Administration's approach to coordination and decision-making in foreign policy and the capabilities and emphases of the several foreign affairs agencies in implementing policy in the countries of the developing world.

I sincerely hope that you will find it possible to accept this invitation. Your talk might be on the subject of how intelligence contributes to the decision-making process in our Government in the field of foreign policy. If agreeable, we would like to schedule your talk for June 18, from 11:30 to 12:30.

I wish also at this time to express once again our appreciation for your presentation at last year's conference and for your continuing support of the National Interdepartmental Seminar.

Sincerely yours,

Parker T. Hart
Chairman
Committee on Training

MEMORANDUM FOR: Executive Director-Comptroller

SUBJECT: The National Interdepartmental Seminar

Red -

1. For some time, as you know, we have been concerned that we are wasting the time of a number of our fairly senior officers on a periodic basis by having them attend the National Interdepartmental Seminar. True, they get to meet officers of relatively senior levels from the other agencies of government but it seems now more than ever that the price we're paying for this "getting to know you" exercise is more than it's worth. There must be less expensive ways of accomplishing this.

2. The adverse and negative reactions of the Clandestine Service attendees has been almost uniform. The latest of these is a memorandum from [redacted] of OTR, copy of which I have attached for your convenience. The time has probably come for a review of this matter and the taking of definite decisions. I don't believe we should just stumble on in this course as we're doing now. I should much appreciate your own views.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Mr. [REDACTED] OTR

SUBJECT: NIS #43

1. I found this a tired, uninspired course. The "faculty" is tired; the course is poorly organized. It obviously no longer attracts the attention and support of senior governmental officials. Still trying to maintain the momentum given the course by Robert Kennedy, the staff pretends that the NIS is much more than it really is. Far from providing a comprehensive picture of how the U.S. Government makes its foreign policy and coordinates its operations abroad, the course gives a more confused picture of the present state of U.S. foreign operations than is actually justified by reality.

2. Almost any Clandestine Services officer of sufficient talent and experience to be appointed to a senior position abroad will already know practically everything he is supposed to be learning in this course. Consequently, the course is a waste of these men's time. They may, depending on the circumstances of a given course, get to know a few people from other agencies with whom they will have some relationships in the field - but this is a very minor, accidental and overrated benefit from the course. The real gain from the NIS to a future COS or COB is likely to be so slight as to make it irrelevant whether he attends the course or not.

3. It can be argued that though our people may gain nothing from the course, they contribute something by their very presence. To some degree this is undoubtedly true. This, again, is a very haphazard process, however, and the question arises whether the same effect could not be achieved in a cheaper and less time-consuming fashion - e.g., by inviting military and DOD men of the type who attend this course to come to our building for a day of concentrated briefing "on our own ground" which we could make much more impressive than the present Agency contribution to the NIS.

4. Our participation in the course still entails a degree of security erosion which needs to be taken into account in any estimate of the net advantage/disadvantage of Agency involvement. I have the impression that, in general, the level of people sent by most agencies to this course has been declining. (State and USIA send very few people; AID sends a very mixed group.) The military send a great number of officers and some civilians who really have no need to know much, if anything, about our Agency's operations abroad. Nevertheless, the present manner of our participation in this course identifies our officers to everyone in the course and results in exposure of a considerable accumulation of data about our targets and methods of operation. I am not naturally inclined to be highly conservative on this kind of issue, but I feel uneasy about this aspect of our involvement with the course. It is time to reexamine it again.

5. Though the course in toto is not our basic responsibility, our long participation in it and the financial contribution we make to it entitle us as an Agency to raise questions about its current and future relevance. Like long-existing projects and long-standing procedures, courses even as prestigious as the NIS should be thoroughly reviewed from time to time. If it is not politic for our Agency to call into question the existence of the course as such, we are guilty of not looking after our own interests if we do not periodically reconsider whether we are getting our money's worth out of what we are putting into it. Perhaps we are; if we are, it is not clear to me just what the gain for us is.
